He did make a bad decision but he is far from a bad child. I am his auntie and although all of us in the family show him right from wrong, he decided to make this bad decision. He is taking full responsibility for his actions and knows what he has done was extremely unacceptable. The past will not change but I will never turn my back on this wonderful young man. No one is perfect, he has a bright future ahead..... As a community we need to get together and help these kids, they are our future.....

People need to learn that poor judgment and their bad actions has Consequences. I feel young people today have no respect for others. Starting out this young what to say he does not stop here.

I am his mother an I don't understand what his hair has to do with anything. Yes he was wrong for what he has done and he has to face what ever the consequences are for his actions but if you don't now all the fact you should not speak on anything the paper does not tell you every thing for one this happen last week, and he did not take this weapon to school he got it from school yes he was caught with it and he should not have had anything on him in the first place but he WILL account for his actions. He has home training but he is young an thinks he won't get caught like a lot of us thought when we was his age. All the negative comments are crazy but at least he does see now how the world will judge you for anything that you do just by reading things with out all the facts.
